

Webinar on Sericulture

The online webinar on "Sericulture," organized by Government Science College, Vankal on October 2, 2020, was a highly informative and engaging event that brought together experts, students, and industry professionals from across the country. Utilizing a sophisticated virtual platform, the webinar effectively facilitated a dynamic exchange of knowledge on the multifaceted field of sericulture, the cultivation of silkworms for silk production. The event commenced with a lecture of Dr. Mukesh R. Siddhapara, a leading sericulturist, who provided a comprehensive overview of the history, current practices, and future prospects of sericulture. Dr. Siddhapara's presentation highlighted the economic significance of silk production and the role it plays in rural development. His insights were supported by a range of visual aids, including infographics and video clips that illustrated the lifecycle of silkworms and the various stages of silk production. The webinar featured a series of interactive topics focusing on specific aspects of sericulture. Such as advanced silkworm breeding techniques, disease management, and the integration of sustainable practices in silk farming. Participants had the opportunity to ask questions and engage in discussions, enhancing the learning experience. Additionally, a virtual workshop demonstrated the use of modern technology in sericulture, such as automated reeling machines and environmental control systems. The seminar concluded with a discussion that addressed the challenges and opportunities in the sericulture industry, emphasizing the importance of innovation and collaboration for future growth. Overall, the seminar was a significant success, enriching participants' understanding of sericulture and fostering a deeper appreciation for its complexities and potential. The positive feedback and high engagement levels reflect the seminar's impact on advancing knowledge and encouraging interest in this vital sector.
